

We've cut through the green tape for you.

Local decision makers are having a tough time these days cutting through all the competing claims from manufacturers and suppliers touting "green" products and services. Since there is no legal definition of "green," where do you turn to get unbiased, reliable information?

Developed by an educational non-profit, HGIMT draws on the work of hundreds of municipal leaders and government agencies from across the country. To find out how small actions at the local level can have a big impact on global issues, log on today!

For those involved with local governments, schools and business communities, "How Green Is My Town?" is a one-stop online resource for all things green, from legally vetted policies on procurement and green cleaning to innovative ideas for energy, recycling, transportation and water.

"How Green Is My Town?" is a project of Grassroots Environmental Education, a non-profit organization.
© 2009. Permission to reproduce for advocacy granted. For more information, please visit our web site www.grassrootsinfo.org.